

*Diversity
According to South Park
&
Family Guy*

“A Different Approach...”

Comedic dramas such as “The Family Guy” and “South Park” are more likely to teach and reinforce the morals and values to young adults than the homes that they are being raised in.

This, given that families share less than seven meaningful interactive minutes a day while the average high school student, college undergrad spend seven hours a day watching TV, should not surprise.

Television like all things creative, imitates life and life of late seems to be imitating television. In Matt Glowacki’s presentation he offers; “programs operating on the fringes of societal acceptance often have a more developed, logical, and inclusive view of our society; than the entities which seek a strangle hold on morality in our culture.”

“Family Guy” & “South Park” are examined anew and mined for gold as Matt identifies the ways in which these programs break down stereotypical attitudes and behavior regarding people’s differences. Matt’s interpretation of these popular cultural icons educates, but most importantly enforces a fresh look at life around us. What’s the point, what’s the moral, and how are they reflective of the goings on of our culture?

MattGlowacki.com